A MIDDLE-AGED ORGANIZATION

It is perhaps a commonplace that the dullest and most uninteresting period in a person's life is that of middle-age.

The creativeness, the vigour and spontaneity of youth have been squeezed out by the pressure of an unrelenting environment. The serenity and detachedness of riper years have not yet been achieved. We see before us the middle-aged person held firm in the grip of circumstances, hammered continuously by the various forces that play around him, hardening, toughening in the process, to be able to keep his place in the turmoil. The world is assuming the aspect of a whirring, buzzing machine. He is adapting himself to its conditions by allowing his personality to be turned into a wheel or cog.

Movements and organizations go through the same process as individuals.

In the early stages of its being a movement has freshness and fascination. The idea that inspired it has not been crushed by the weight of the matter which embodies it. People hear of the idea and are thrilled. They enter its lists and are rejuvenated by its vitality. A holy flame is kindled within them and they kneel at the altar of the idea and pay it sacrificial homage.

Then the organization grows older. It acquires traditions; it becomes more and more institutionalized; every thought has its fixed formula; every inspiration has its dogma. We see a widely ramified organization, hardened, capable, efficient, a mechanism among mechanisms. People come to it for guidance and inspiration, and instead of a Delphic voice hear the buzz and whirr of a machine.

The Twenty-Ninth Convention of American Zionists has shown us that the Zionist Organization is now in the period of middle-age. The lack of enthusiasm; the absence of idealism; the utter want of inspiring qualities. Was heard only the grind of a machine, the chuckle of contented success; the lip-smacking of battened middle-age. Delegates came from all over the country eager for a word that would hearten them. Most of them were simple Jews whose fancies had been stirred by the tales of Jewish heroism in the rebuilding of the old land. The tragic figure of an old nation clinging to its treasures in the midst of a pack of predatory peoples, straining its every nerve to reach the beckoning haven, had caught their imaginations, and they came like children anxious to hear more and more of the inspiring stories and to be lifted up into the world of soothing unreality. They were disappointed. The strutting figures of the Lipskys and the Goldbergs blocked their vision; the saw-dust reports and resolutions of the committees choked their ardour.

There were three important issues raised at the convention: Revisionism, The Jewish Agency, the Crimean settlement.

The convention overwhelmingly rejected the Revisionist doctrine. It refused to allow Jabotinsky, the brilliant exponent of Revisionism, to appear before it and present his case. The majority of the delegates undoubtedly had never heard a dispassionate analysis of the doctrines of Revisionism. Certainly they should have been given an opportunity to judge for themselves whether Revisionism really had an important message. But the leaders safely assumed that the bulk of the delegates had not the intense yearning for knowledge of the problems confronting their organization. And they caused the dismissal of Revisionism with a gesture of middle-age sophistication.

The resolution passed on the Agency question was wise in effect. It was high time that the futility of the negotiations for the Agency was recognized. But the convention did not arrive at the conclusion because it realized that the ideology underlying the movement was unsound. The Agency scheme was disingenuous and unwise from the outset, and doomed to failure. The American Zionist heads were flushed with the success of the last United Palestine Campaign. They were already hatching plans for a larger campaign for the coming year. And the idea pervaded their whole attitude that they can henceforth do things themselves. They need no longer bow before the mighty men of wealth and standing. They have sufficient means to create an upper stratum of wealth and standing of their own. It was an instance of the psychology of the middle-class—worshipping the upper class, and trying to make themselves believe that they are an upper class themselves and can do without the more pretentious upper level.

The convention's stand on the Crimea settlement question was entirely unfounded and unjustified. One may be inclined to discount some of the claims of the protagonists of the Russian settlement plan as a cure-all for the vast Russian Jewish problem. But it is almost perverted to claim that this scheme with its relief features, was designed primarily to damage the work of Zionism. The convention committed itself to this point of view without intelligent consideration of the subject. This unwise stand may unfortunately react unfavourably on the Zionist efforts during the coming year.

The Zionist Organization of America has lost the character of a crusading idealistic movement. It is an organization of middle-age and middle-class tendencies with the psychology characteristic of that age and class.

LEON GOLDMAN'S RESIGNATION

Leon Goldman's long and faithful service to the cause of Zionism merits an expression of genuine regret on the occasion of his retirement from the arena of Zionist activity.

Those who are familiar with the history of Canadian Zionism will fully recognize the value of Mr. Goldman's contribution to the cause in Canada. An idealist and dreamer, Mr. Goldman was among the first in this country to respond to the call of Herzl. For over twenty-five years he served the movement in various executive capacities. During the past five years he assumed complete charge of the Zionist work in Canada, and he brought to his task a degree of sincerity and devotion unusual in the majority of communal servants. On some occasions his judgment on important matters was questioned. But Zionists throughout the country always felt that Mr. Goldman was sincere and ready to fight for what he thought was right.

IN MEMORIAM

IN MEMORY OF WOLFE SINGER

In sad and loving memory of our dear husband and father who departed this life 25th day of Tamuz 5685 (July 17, 1925). He lives in our hearts for evermore. Inserted by wife, son and daughters.

A protest against the appointment of Col. George S. Symes, civil secretary of the Palestine Government, as the accredited representative of the mandatory power to appear before the Permanent Mandates Commission at its June session, was voiced by the "Falastin," organ of the Palestine Arab Executive, on the ground that Col. Symes is a supporter of political Zionism, and cannot impartially represent the Palestine Government at Geneva.

The reports of the year's activities in the various educational organizations of London have recently been made public. All of these indidate lively activity and considerable progress. To an outsider there appear to be too many organizations of the same type in London, but this is due to the fact that we are unfamiliar with the workings of the public school system in England, which is quite different from our own. The Jewish Religious Education Board, which has the services of Mr. H. M. Adler as director, is apparently interested chiefly in extension education. It reports that during the year it had 4,078 children on its register—850 boys and 3,228 girls. It is also indicated that this shows a decrease of 354 children from late year's numbers, and the decrease is ascribed to the fact that many more children attended the regular day schools. The Union of Hebrew and Religious Classes reports an enrollment of 3,476, an increase of 711 over that of last year. This organization apparently aims at a more intensive course of instruction. A special committee appointed in 1923 to study the question of Jewish children in public schools presented its report, in which it is urged that provision should be made at existing public schools for guidance and religious instruction for the Jewish pupils. The committee suggests that a central organization should be created by the Jewish War Memorial which shall arrange for the appointment of suitable teachers to visit during week-ends public schools attended by Jewish boys.

At the annual meeting of Jews' College, presided over by Sir Robert Waley Cohen, the rabbinical diploma was awarded by the Chief Rabbi to Rabbi S Mestel. At the meeting it was reported that the college has now come to an amicable understanding with the authorities of the Jewish War Memorial and that it was hoped that a new era has been opened for the extension of the usefulness of the institution.

Enlistment into the Palestine frontier force, created by the Palestine Government for the purpose of defending the Palestine and Transjordanian frontiers was closed, according to a report dated June 7, to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. Out of the 425 soldiers stationed at Sarafand, twenty-eight are Jews. Two hundred Jewish volunteers recently applied for enlistment in the frontier force. Nearly all were rejected without examination.

Dr. Julius Hochfelder, of Brooklyn, has been commissioned a captain in the United States Army Reserve Corps and is assigned to the Education Section.

Dr. Ernst Cohen, professor of physical chemistry at the University of Utrecht, and president of the International Congress of Pure and Applied Chemistry, has come to the United States for a series of lectures at Cornell and other American Universities.

Laurentian Fresh Air Camp

When do you leave for your vacation? Are you all set to go? Before you tuck your best toothbrush into a corner of your suitcase, send us a contribution for the Laurentian Fresh Air Camp. It'll pep you up—to say nothing of what it will mean to a group of very poor and very, very tired mothers and young babies, who, but for your donations, must drag through a weary, hot and dusty summer in the overcrowded sections of our city. To you a fortnight away means a good time or a pleasant change. To these mothers and babies, it means a new lease on life! The Bnai Brith Camp is taking care of four hundred underprivileged boys chosen by the Family Welfare Department of Federation. But there are hundreds of women on their lists, in desperate need of just such care, for whom there is no hope whatsoever of a vacation, except through you. Whatever your contribution it will be of real assistance, and put to immediate use. An envelope containing $1.50 from "N. N." reached us early Monday morning.

What can you give? Send your contribution now to Mrs. P. Glickman, 328 Redfern Avenue, Westmount 2132, or to Lena Ashkaloney, CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW, 288 St. James Street, Main 4079, 2285, 8341 and 6344. All donations will be acknowledged in the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW. A series of entertainments will be arranged shortly for this fresh air fund.

The conveners want your money, your time, or the loan of your car for a few hours. Communicate with them at once.

"I am glad to be able to say there is very little immorality among the Hebrews of this city, though there is more of it in Montreal, where these people come from," remarked Magistrate Cohen when he found Morris Davies guilty of keeping a disorderly house and fined him $50 and costs or one month plus seven days.

"What I said, and what I intended to say (and I do not retract or modify it) was that, so far as the investigations in this court are concerned, connected with the fraudulent dispositions of property, and in which creditors stood to lose thousands of dollars, 90 per cent. of such cases came from that class of the community designed as Hebrew merchants."—Justice Fisher in the Bankruptcy Court, Toronto.

Still, there are Winnipeg, Quebec City, Regina, Ottawa, Hamilton, et al., yet to be heard from, and while there is life there can be hope that neither the Jewish community of Toronto nor of Montreal excels in immorality.

Speaking of Justice Fisher and his now famous remarks about the Jews, when he explained his comment, he said:

"To say that the whole Jewish community is mixed in with fraud and cannot be trusted and should not have credit, is the farthest thing from my mind. It is obvious to everybody that the Jewish community is a highly respected class in education, industry and philanthropy. They are a law-abiding people. I don't know of any class in the community who conduct themselves, so far as their whole life is concerned, better than the Jewish people do."
And the Evening Telegram printed it

Justice Fisher said that the way to get rid of the Jewish offenders is to withhold credit from them. Upton Sinclair advises the Jews to reprobate and ostracize their black sheep. The first plan militates too much against the honest man. The second, calling for the concerted wrath and revolt of all decent Jews, has every merit except that of frequent test.

Among letters received by the REVIEW on the subject of what Justice Fisher said, one from Montreal contained the following: "I think that a remark of this kind by a judge from the bench should not be passed unchallenged. Trusting that you will comment editorially in order to vindicate the good name of the Canadian Jew, I am, etc., etc."

Unfortunately, the good name of the Canadian Jew or any other can not be vindicated by deputations waiting upon justices nor by editorial comment. A better way might be that one pointed out by Rabbi Abraham Cronbach, professor of sociology at the Hebrew Union College, in his beautiful book, "Prayers of the Jewish Advance," in which he says: "Every Jew should remember that the world sometimes judges all Jews by the conduct of one or of a few. Each of us has it in his or her power to bring credit or discredit upon the entire Jewish people. The one remedy for prejudice is good Jewish character. Bad character on the part of individual Jews is fuel to the flames of prejudice. Good character on the part of individual Jews will change prejudice into respect and hatred into love for all of our people."

A statue has just been unveiled in Philadelphia of Robert Morris, the history book financier of the Revolutionary War, and the Jews there have finally taken the hint and are discussing the erection of a statue to Chaim Solomon, the actual financier of the Revolutionary War. The United States school history books do not mention Solomon as the banker and patriot who backed the war, although his history can be traced in every encyclopaedia and his claims have been thoroughly established. They portray Robert Morris as the financial hero of the struggle. True, Morris stopped a while in the debtors' prison and died in poverty, but he came out of the war richer and lost his fortune long after in speculation.

Solomon died at the age of forty-five in Philadelphia, leaving a widow and two little children in poverty. He had given $650,000 to Morris of which at least $400,000 was never repaid. Many of the notes were unsecured and many vouchers were lost in the destruction of records in 1814, but one note is in the possession of a Philadelphian. It is for about $970, signed by Morris and negotiated through a French bank. Given to Solomon in 1782, it has never been honoured.

Last December Congressman Mooney, of Ohio, introduced a bill to erect a monument in Washington to Chaim Solomon at a cost of $50,000. The bill declared that during the long years of struggle for American independence it was impossible to collect sufficient taxes to support the army and that Solomon loaned and contributed more than $700,000, not one dollar of the principal or interest of which has ever been repaid. Last summer the convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians passed a resolution protesting against the failure of the school and other histories to give credit to Chaim Solomon, the Polish Jew, who, more than Robert Morris, was the financier of the Revolution.

So, you see, the record of Solomon stands, but is not known generally. Here is an opportunity for the American Jewish Historical Society meeting in Philadelphia during the Sesquicentennial Celebration, the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. In its survey of the role of the Jews in America's struggle for independence, the society should make Exhibit A of Chaim Solomon's services to show that the Jew is no newcomer in America. The people of the United States should know that they have been guilty of indecent neglect and ingratitude and that bigotry and intolerance are responsible. Then perhaps some day Chaim Solomon will be placed in the same curricula that contain Shakespeare's Shylock.

Isaac Jacob Chodowski, better known as the Wittkower Rav. He was educated at Posen and Berlin and later studied at the Rabbinical Seminary of Dr. Hildesheimer. Subsequently, his brothers being Ministers at Sheffield, he came to this country, on the recommendation of the late Chief Rabbi and Dr. Friedlander, was appointed to Jews' College, being the first Continental student to enter that institution. His first post was in 1887, when he was appointed minister of the Hebrew Congregation. In 1889 on the recommendation of Dr. Adler he became Minister at Christchurch, New Zealand and went later to similar appointments at Brisbane, Dunedin, Melbourne and finally, Sydney.

Arab Memorandum Before the Mandate Commission

We referred in these columns to the memorandum presented by the Zionist organization in the capacity of the Jewish Agency, before Mandates Commission of the League of Nations, which is now meeting at Geneva. In addition to this there was also a memorandum presented by the Arabs, coming from the Palestine Arab Committee, and one from the Agudath Israel. The Arab petition this year is directed chiefly against the power holding the mandate over Palestine. It points to the fact that the Palestinian government is not acting in accordance with the provisions of the mandate, since it does not allow to the majority of the population a voice in the affairs of the government, commensurate with its numbers.

In commenting upon this petition, the Doar Hayom, a Jerusalem daily journal, says that the present memorandum is the most dangerous that has been submitted by the Arabs to the League of Nations thus far. The chief feature of the present memorandum is the demand for a democratic national government in Palestine, in which Jews and Arabs would take part in proportion to their numerical strength. The demand is based on Article C of the Mandate which provides for local autonomy, "so far as circumstances permit." The memorandum states that Palestine enjoyed communal self-government under Turkish rule and urges the fulfilment of this article. The Doar Hayom observes that Jews could not possibly have confidence in a government in which Jews and Arabs would take part in accordance to their numbers, and it does not think that conditions are favorable to the granting of such self-government. It does not object to the Arabs being granted communal autonomy but insists that no legislative assembly should be constituted that does not recognize the principal that Palestine is the Jewish National Home.

"Carmel," an Arabic paper, published recently an open letter to the High Commissioner, which points to the friendship which Arabs always entertained toward the English. The letter declares that Arabs are gradually awakening as a nation and would like to fulfil their national aspirations in accord with English. "The English must free themselves from the influence of the Zionists, who entirely misrepresent the position of the country. Arabs are neither willing nor able to utter threats." The same paper in another issue speaks with pride and satisfaction of the services rendered to England in the recent strike by that "Semite," Sir Herbert Samuel, and cites this as proof of the abilities of the Semitic race. "If Arabs only wished it, they could attain the same degree of influence and importance as enjoyed by Disraeli, Mond, Reading and others."

Emir Abdulla, the ruler of Transjordania, recently gave out a statement in which he declared that the difference between the Jews and the Arabs can readily be straightened out by a direct understanding between the two parties without any outside interference. He said also that before this can be brought about, it would be necessary to establish as to which of the various Arabic parties are authorized to speak in the name of the Arabs. As a matter of fact, the Arabic camp is much more divided than the Jewish camp. "Haaretz," the influential Hebrew daily of Jerusalem, speaks with confidence that in the course of a few years there will be a consolidation of all Arab forces. The Arab conference, which was recently held in Jerusalem, was attended by 150 delegates from all parts of the country. Ahmed Seid Pasha, the Egyptian scholar, who was the moving spirit at the conference, is a strong adherent of the pan-Arabic idea. When this will come about, the Zionists will have a much harder battle to fight, since any Arab union will probably not tolerate the idea of Palestine becoming a Jewish national home.

JEWISH FARMERS IN POLAND FOR ORT

The first convention of the "Council of Jewish Farmers and Gardeners of Poland" took place recently at Warsaw. The convention was called in order to discuss their situation and to evolve methods to improve their future conditions. Among the many resolutions passed at the convention was one concerning the activity of the Ort in Poland. This resolution reads as follows:

"The first convention of the Jewish Farmers and Gardeners of Poland recognizes the great importance of the work of the Ort for the Jewish farmers and gardeners. At the most difficult times, when the Jewish community did not even understand the sad plight of the Jewish farmers and gardeners, the Ort was the first to come to their assistance. Not only by helping them financially, but by supplying agricultural instructors who taught the Jewish farmers and gardeners the newest methods of cultivating the land, so that the best results may be achieved. The Ort also organized co-operatives in the larger agricultural colonies.

"The convention expresses the hope that the Ort will continue its interest in behalf of the Jewish farmers and gardeners and that it will take an active part in the work of the Verband in order that the conditions of the Jewish farmers and gardeners may be materially improved.

CATHOLICS OBTAIN FUNDS HERE FOR PALESTINE

The Arabic paper, "Felestin," in Jerusalem is informed that Cardinal Barlamino, formerly Patriarch of Jerusalem, and a bitter antagonist of the Zionist idea, obtained in America, a fund from Catholics, amounting to half a million dollars, for the purpose of assisting Catholics in Palestine to purchase land and settle, especially in the vicinity of Jerusalem. The idea is to establish with this money credit organization, which will lend out sums of money to Catholics who wish to settle in the Holy Land, thus to strengthen the Catholic settlement in Palestine.

ZIONISTS PROSECUTED BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

A renewal of the Soviet activity against Zionist leaders in Russia is reported from Berlin. It is said that during the past few months nearly a thousand Zionists have been arrested and sent to Siberia. The campaign is directed especially against the Socialist-Zionist Party (Poale Zion), who are regarded as contra-revolutionists. This party is the chief opponent of the Yevsektia, the Jewish section of the Communist Party, and for this reason is the target of the persecutions.

S. D. Levontin, former general manager of the Anglo-Palestine Company, Jaffa, and a director of the Jewish Colonial Trust, recently celebrated his seventieth birthday in Palestine. He is one of the grand old men of the Zionist movement.

DEPLORABLE CONDITIONS IN THE ROUMANIAN UNIVERSITIES

The [illegible] of the numerus clausus, or percentage quota, which caused distress among university students in Hungary, has spread to Roumania. But whereas in Hungary the quota allows the admission of a few Jewish students, in Roumania Jewish students have been barred and the universities closed for more than a year, so that students of all creeds have lost two semesters. Mr. I. Yevin, who came to Roumania to study the situation in the universities, writes in a recent number of the Jewish weekly paper that the first thing that strikes one about the university building in Bucharest or Jassy, is that it is surrounded by soldiers. Each Jewish student was surrounded on entering and was offered the alternative of being [illegible]ched or of signing a document that he voluntarily withdrew from the university and would not attend any lectures. Many, faced with this alternative, have signed the declaration. The professors and lecturers are indignant. The university officials are afraid of the anti-semitic student [illegible]s Yevin.

When the university senate decided to expel the ringleaders of the disturbances, the minister of education reversed the decision. When the council of professors intervened on behalf of the Jewish professor, Dr. Reiner, who was attacked by his students and compelled to keep away from the university, the minister of education asked for a statement from the students; they supplied a list of names and the matter was dropped.

The new examination system introduced by the department of education has proved an effective bar to the majority of Jewish students.

Jews and Dancing

By LEON O. DAVIS

Recently the magistrates of a provincial English town refused permission for a cafe to be used for a Jewish wedding celebration on Sunday because they understood that dancing was to be indulged in. The parties contesting this decision pointed out to the magistrates that dancing in honour of the bride was held by Jews to be a matter of piety. Perhaps this piece of information reminded the British magistrates of their Old Testaments and the frequent and close connection which is often referred to therein between Judaism and dancing. Perhaps also it may have shown them in a vivid flash one aspect of the vast gulf which separates the Jewish from the Christian attitude of "religiousness."

A people whose religion takes up very much the attitude of "all things for the best in the best of all possible worlds," which in essentials Christianity denies, is naturally one which will encourage dancing, the physical and rhythmical expression of joy and well-being. Heine, for all his outward conversion to Christianity, described dancing so Jewishly as "praying with the legs," and it is only necessary to read the many references to dancing in the Bible to realize how Jewish this point of view really is.

Rhythm is the essence of dancing as it is also of music, and this connection is seen in the fact of the Jews being probably the most musical of all the races. There was nothing of the "kill-joy" attitude towards dancing among the great Jewish scholars of Talmudic times. Rabbi Judah ben Illai was known to have indulged in this healthy and joyous pastime, and the great festivals were invariably marked by dancing, which was approved and applauded by the sages. Even the dark days of the middle ages and the terrible period of ghetto life were unable to quench the Jewish love of dancing, and most ghettos were possessed of some sort of dance hall where young and old, male and female, expressed their joy in life, that flame which their religion kept burning and which neither persecution nor privation was able entirely to extinguish.

True, it was found necessary to guard against the many abuses to which dancing like all other human pleasures is subject. The rabbis in the middle ages laid down that only certain near relations, male and female, were permitted to dance together, such as husband and wife, brother and sister, but this rule was more of an admonition than a strict law, and was clearly the result of the tendency to bigotry which immurement in ghettos was bound to produce.

A well-known non-Jewish writer, dealing with the subject, remarked recently, "The Jew is a born dancer," and went on to describe the large proportion of Jews to be found in present-day dance-halls and their generally excellent performances, as though the statement pro-quoted were axiomatic. Whatever branch of dancing we examine, we find the Jew playing an important part. Jazz and rag-time dancing has been developed and its popularity produced by the music conceived in Jewish brains; music composed very often by Jews who know nothing of the theory and writing of music, and who catch their inspiration while moving rhythmically up and down, transposing the ideas of the "born dancer" into the catchy tunes that set all Europe dancing. In the sphere of theatrical production the Jew has done much to teach his audience the joy of watching expert dancers, while he has educated them to understand and appreciate the artistic genius of the great Russian dancers, and has had more than any other to establish and reward the so-called "classical" dancing as a high art.

There is good reason to believe that one of the world's greatest danseuses is of pure Jewish descent, although the vicissitudes of childhood cut her off from her people.

The question has often arisen: "Is there an essentially Jewish dance?" People have sought to find in the Chassidic dances some peculiar artistic form as the germ of the specifically Jewish dance. Dancing, as is well known, plays an important part in Chassidic religious customs. They revert, as it were, to type, and express their religious happiness as did our people of old, as the Mishna tells, when they went up to Jerusalem bearing the first fruits to the Temple. There seems to be good ground for stating that the genuine Jewish dance should express its individuality by a movement of the arms and hands, a means of expression among Jews which has been the gibe and jest of Gentiles for many years past. Not that this ridicule can be regarded as of any critical value, for it is akin to the antics which monkeys make with their mouths in derisive mimicry of man's powers of speech.

The famous Jewish dancer, Baruch Hagadati, has established an academy in Eretz Yisrael and has definitely set himself the task of discovering the Jewish dance. Hagadati has a very thorough knowledge of the technique of his subject, and, as a former leading dancer at the Imperial Art Theatre, Moscow, and at the Kiev Theatre, is in a position to speak with authority on the subject. He has studied the Chassidic dancing and evolved the wonderful dance, "Rebbe Natha," in which he so well expresses the spirit of the East European Jew. But this dance, although a fine interpretation of the spirit of a section of Jewry is not (and its creator was the first to point out this fact) the Jewish dance which is to express the soul of our people.

In the search for the soul of Jewry, in whatever branch of art, all roads lead to Zion. Only in the land of Israel can the purely Jewish in art take root and flourish. Elsewhere the results are bound to be heavily influenced by the surrounding nationalities, a fact which makes the Jewish artist in the Diaspora, be he musician, painter, poet or dancer, incapable of scaling the topmost heights of genius.

Only from a Jewish race upon a Jewish soil can great Jewish masterpieces be produced, and the Jewish soul express itself untroubled by the constant fight for its individuality against the seductions of surrounding national influences. Hagadati found this to be so in the art of dancing, which with its twin sister, music, is so closely connected with nationality.

But time is necessary, and generations may have to pass before Hagadati's dream is realized, and the Jewish dance is evolved—re-discovered he would probably express it. Meanwhile Jewish dancers will continue to spend their talent in the Diaspora achieving, and this is no mean success, the entertainment and the artistic elevation of the many nations among whom they are dispersed. But wherever true traditional Judaism maintains, there will be religious conflict between the joyous exercise of movement and the voice of the Divine Praise which is the eternal song of Jewry. Only when, occasionally, Jewish religious leaders imagine an Jewishness to have been in, and sprung from the Judengasse, will the voice of the "kill-joy" be heard in the land.

Jo Davidson, the American Jewish sculptor, has made a bust of Myron T. Herrick, U. S. Ambassador to France, which will be presented to the United States Embassy in Paris this month as a gift from the American colony there.

Rabbi Zirelsohn, of Kishinev, is one of the four Jews who have just been elected to the Roumanian Senate. The other three are Elijah Mendelsohn, M. Gutnic, of Chotin, and M. Streitman, of Bukowina. Among the deputies elected to the Roumanian parliament on the governmental list are six Jews named Wurmbrand, Gutnic, Jaslavitch, Gluendrich, Aron and Ebner.

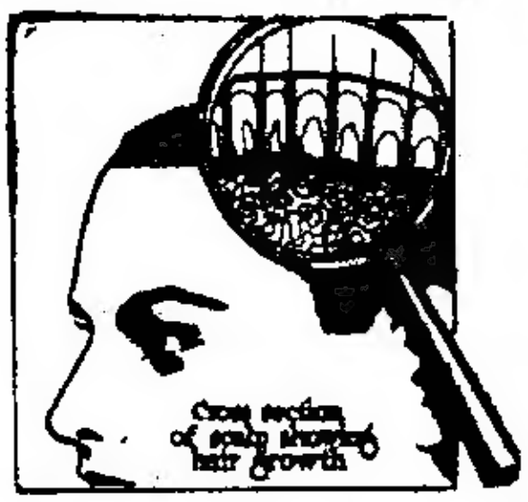
Hair and Its Treatment

in all its phases

Is Mr. Pember's Hobby



Originally he was a hair specialist only. By the use of the Inecto dyes and his own knowledge, Mr. Pember can produce almost thirty shades of hair coloring. The harsh, artificial appearance of old hair dyes is not necessary any longer. The ash shades of blonde and drab brown—so much more natural and becoming to the face—can be obtained.

The ancient fear of our mothers that dyed hair would attract attention to a fading skin has lost its terror.

For one thing, a carefully tended skin need not fade. But most particularly the soft tones of modern coloring are to be considered. It is worth knowing in these days when close bobs make grey hairs so obvious.

LOEW'S

Loew's patrons are going to get a real thrill out of next week's splendid racing picture in which the sport of kings is so vividly featured along with a charming love story involving Old Erin and Young America.

Peter B. Kyne, America's foremost magazine writer, wrote this dramatic story.

"The Shamrock Handicap" is the story of a heroic Irish jockey and an Irish race horse transplanted to an American track. The jockey is injured when a rival pulls on the saddle of his horse, just as it is about to take a hurdle. The horse falls and the boy is believed to be hopelessly crippled. However in the great steeplechase event of the year the jockey selected to ride Lady Sheila's horse can't manage her and the crippled boy is strapped to the saddle and rides to victory over his rival. With the purse money the jockey is restored to health and Lady Sheila and her friends return to Ireland where she marries the boy.

Signor de Morpurgo, an Italian Jewish sportsman, was one of the team which eliminated Holland and advanced the place of Italy in the International Davis Cup Tennis Tournament being played in Rome.

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, mineral, water power, fish, game and scenery, are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.
What settlers say of the soil, climate farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.
